Manual wind dress chronographs from the 1940s and 1950s are a special breed of class - like this 1940s Breitling two register chrono here - and bring a special charm to any formal occasion. Chronographs of this era don't always age well, given most are base metal with stainless steel plating, and often the plating wears has worn off in the intervening seven or eight decades.

The stopwatch function, also known as a chronograph, is one of the most widespread complications.Patek Philippe is a leader in this field and has become a master of the trade. The Geneva-based manufacturer patented a split-seconds chronograph (rattrapante) for a pocket watch all the way back in 1902. Some 20 years later, Patek managed to adapt this intricate complication for use in a wristwatch.
