Over the last few years, much has been written about the “new scramble for Africa” — the attempt by countries and companies to increase their access to markets and natural resources on the continent. In one telling, China has been the principal actor donning neocolonial garb to advance its interests. Growing economic and political interest in Africa certainly has been driven by the impact of Chinese demand on natural resource prices and the country’s need for new overseas markets to ...

That means, the author believes, that Russia’s involvement in Africa is unlikely to be as intense as its BRICs partners. Nevertheless, state-owned gas company Gazprom has significant operations in Nigeria. Beyond the BRICs, Turkey and Malaysia are singled out in the book as increasingly joining the new economic powers in Africa.
